SKYLINED is a collection of images and words, the collaborative effort of photographer Laura Lopez and writer Evelyn Lauer, shared in visual mediums of love and loss via landscape photography in Chicago. The artists met via Instagram, inspired by each other's work, and when they connected face-to-face, instantly realized they shared a story riveted by the common themes of love and loss. They embarked on a creative journey to turn their experiences into collaborative art. In some cases, Laura took the photos and sent them to Evelyn to write poems. In other instances, Evelyn wrote the words and Laura sought out pictures to match. Sometimes they would show up to a scene together: Evelyn writing in her journal; Laura shooting with her Canon. While the project began two years ago with specific "yous" in mind, the yous shifted overtime, and sometimes the city of Chicago itself became the you, the great love story that holds all together. How do you live somewhere that reminds you of someone who no longer (or maybe never did) exists in your immediate life? How do you walk the streets, drive the roads, stare through the windows that hold not only memories but feelings, feelings you can't seem to shake, feelings that stir inside your bones? How does a place become more than what it once was? How do you learn to love the place despite the pain? Through the lens and via the pen, SKYLINED connects with viewers' hearts, exploring the emotions of attachment, remembrance, and unrequited love balanced with and juxtaposed against the architectural and urban landscape of Chicago.
