I experience a strange calmness/emptiness as I finish reading 692 pages of the mammoth book Krishna - The Man and His Philosophy by Chandra Mohan Jain (popularly known as Acharya Rajneesh/Osho). It was during a ten day meditation camp in 1970 at Manali that Osho gave a discourse that was later transcribed into this beautiful book.

Only a man like Krishna can be uncompromising, he need not compromise. He is uncompromising because he accepts both sides of truth together; he does not deny either of them. One who denies something is forced to compromise at some deeper level with what he denies, because it is. He who accepts life in its totality need not compromise at all.

With the tools of modern Neuroscience, he enables us to look into the imaginary Krishna character, created by an ancient Indian man, and discover its biological impact on human life. In his peerlessly lucid explanatory ways, Naskar takes us inside the protoplasmic realm of the human brain and reveals to us the implications of belief upon a mythical character in the path of global progress.

The Indian mystic Krishna lived many centuries ago, yet in him Osho sees a man far ahead of his time, whose time, even now, is still to come. Where most orthodox religions are anti life, Krishna's revolutionary insight is that a really religious life is one that is enjoyed and embraced fully. This series of discourses is devoted entirely to questions from seekers, and in his responses Osho gives glimpses of the vast joy to be found when life is embraced fully.
